Immuron enrolls first patient in paediatric fatty liver trial in the U.S.

Immuron (ASX:IMC) has enrolled the first patient for its paediatric NAFLD (non-alcoholic fatty liver disease) Phase II trial conducted by Emory University in Georgia, U.S.

This Phase II, double blind, randomized study is designed to assess the safety and efficacy of Immuron's IMM-124E for the treatment of paediatric NAFLD.

Paediatric NAFLD is a progressive form of liver disease associated with excessive fat storage in the liver together with inflammation, which can then lead to liver fibrosis and cirrhosis.

IMM-124E works upstream, and on several pathways, to reduce liver inflammation and is a unique treatment option compared to other leading investigational agents.

The principal objective of this study is to evaluate whether 12 weeks of IMM-124E treatment in children with confirmed NALFD will decrease serum ALT.

The study aims to enrol 40 paediatric patients.

Paediatric NAFLD is believed to affect up to 5% - 10% of the U.S. paediatric population.

A U.S. landmark study that examined the incidence of the disease in 742 children found that 17.3% of children aged 15 to 19 years had NAFLD.

There are currently no treatments approved for paediatric NAFLD.

Immuron's share price has increased about 11% since the start of 2017, last trading at $0.30.
