FYI's goal for the certified test work was to independently confirm the quality of the final alumina product that it intends to produce commercially under its HPA strategy.

The certification reduces product uncertainty and helps to ensure quality control and assurance in providing a consistent and reliable product to the market.

FYI announced last month it had expedited its mining trade-off study to integrate it with other ongoing study components.

The study has so far identified several key advantages including: a mining schedule of around 240,000 tonnes of ore per year; multiple operating pits for selective mining; and infrastructure and scheduling to support a long mine life.

The mining study will be progressed alongside other components of the prefeasibility study, ensuring the overall integration of the economic review is detailed, robust and consistent for Cadoux's operations.

FYI's HPA strategy is to mine and beneficiate kaolin on-site and transport the beneficiated aluminous clay to Kwinana for refining, before being exported to expanding tech and battery-related markets.
