Results from this program will be combined with other exploration data to design a resource development drill program scheduled for the March quarter 2019.

A JORC resource update is underway using the near-24,000 metres of previous drill data and is expected in early 2019.

Artemis' CEO Wayne Bramwell said: "This drill program is testing strike extensions to the east and west of the existing 1.2 kilometres of strike drilled at Carlow Castle to date and provides Artemis with a running start into 2019.

"The next stage of resource development post the release of the resource update will include a targeted RC and diamond program to provide additional samples for geotechnical, structural and metallurgical test work."

Artemis continues to build a resource base at Carlow Castle, which it hopes to turn into a mining operation with the ore being processed through the nearby 100% owned Radio Hill processing plant.

Last month Artemis received initial results from its metallurgical program underway at the Carlow Castle.

Positively, the first pass metallurgical program indicated that Carlow Castle is amenable to low cost gravity gold recovery and base metal flotation processes.
