

The technology has a particular significance in oncology, the medical field concerned with the treatment of cancer.

The technology's first clinical application is TexRAD Lung, which can help reveal information on lung tumours, whereas the other application, TexRAD Research, is used to complement existing infrastructure to help analyse medical image scans.

Bleepa

Bleepa is an encrypted medical messaging app that can be used on smartphones, tablets and desktops, allowing clinicians to communicate with other team members securely.

The app enables faster clinical decision making between team members, which will improve patient care.

How it is doing

In August, Bleepa was awarded a place on the NHSx National Clinical Communication Tool (NCCT) framework, meaning NHS Trusts can buy it by drawing down from a £3mIn centralised fund over two years, giving Bleepa national coverage and providing independent validation of the quality and suitability of the platform for frontline delivery.

Feedback said this stamp of approval will allow it to drive sales in other markets.

What the boss says: Tom Oakley, chief executive

"Bleepa has set a new standard for medical communication tools. I am delighted Bleepa has been awarded a place on the NHSx Clinical Communication Tool framework which positions Bleepa in the vanguard of medical imaging communications and provides a vehicle for potential reimbursement whilst simultaneously making Bleepa available to the whole of the NHS."
