CannPal intends to transition from research & development (R&D) to a commercialisation phase as it prepares the trial design for a phase 2A study of its cannabinoid development therapeutic CPAT-01 in animals.

The company's lead drug candidate is a cannabis-derived canine pain and inflammation medication.

Last month, CannPal received two key ethics approvals to progress the research and development of its lead therapeutic products, CPAT-01 and DermaCann.

CPAT-01 is a pain and inflammatory control being developed for dogs and DermaCann is a nutraceutical product in development to promote canine skin health.

CannPal hopes to complete recruitment for both studies by mid CY2019.
